Grace: Thank you! I'm so glad you liked the book. There are many inspirations for this book, but the one that began it was when my daughter was three and we celebrated the Moon Festival for the first time. The Moon Festival is an important Asian holiday—kind of like Thanksgiving here in the US—but the way you celebrate it is by eating ...

Grace Lin starts the story off with a Chinese family preparing a picnic at night to honor the Mid-Autumn Moon Festival. Each person has their own special job to set up for the celebration. They set up glowing lanterns and tea. Then they all sit down to eat "mooncakes". After they eat each member of the family thanks the moon and wishes upon it.

The Moon - Start with a Book

There is a hush as they admire the moon in the sky. Then everyone does their part to help set up the nighttime picnic. The moon-honoring table is arranged, sweet mooncakes are eaten and rounded cups of tea are carefully poured. Children then parade with bright paper lanterns, and everyone sends a secret, unspoken wish up to the moon.
